The Museum Spotlight

A New Chapter for Art in Orange County

By Kathryn Kanjo, Museum Director, UC Irvine Langson Orange County Museum of Art

As a California native, I have long been fascinated by the ways this state has shaped the course of modern and contemporary art. And as the new director of UC Irvine Langson Orange County Museum of Art, I am excited to share with our visitors how in California, and in the southland especially, new art has emerged and evolved alongside dramatic developments in innovation, education, and culture.

Throughout my career as a museum professional, I have returned to two questions, namely, how does art reflect the place and time in which it is made, and how can it help us see the world differently? The remarkable depth of art assembled at UCI Langson Museum offers nearly infinite possible answers. The collection spans more than nine thousand works, from California Impressionism and plein air painting to contemporary photography, video, and installation. I am inspired by the opportunities it poses to carry out our mission of public access, scholarship, and cultural engagement.

Our museum's story is rooted in the postwar era, when Orange County was being transformed by new industries, expanding communities, and a growing commitment to education and the arts. In 1962, thirteen women founded a space in Newport Beach with an ambitious vision: to bring contemporary art to a rapidly changing region. That community-led initiative would grow into the Orange County Museum of Art. Just three years later, UC Irvine opened its doors, with the arts among its founding academic priorities. Its School of Fine Arts, now the Claire Trevor School of the Arts, embraced experimentation and interdisciplinary practices, drawing on and channeling the broader creative energy of Southern California.

In 2017, UC Irvine established its own museum, anchored by the California Impressionist and plein air paintings of The Irvine Museum and the noted collection of California art donated by Bente and Gerald Buck. A transformational gift from Jack and Shanaz Langson further advanced the university's vision for a dedicated space connecting art, scholarship, and community, which took form as the Jack and Shanaz Langson Institute and Museum of California Art. In 2025, these two distinct institutional histories came together as UC Irvine Langson Orange County Museum of Art.

The combined collection offers a visual record of how California has shaped, and been shaped by, the history of art. Artists have repeatedly turned to the region's terrain, climate, and communities not simply as subjects to depict, but as catalysts for new ways of seeing and making. From Guy Rose's luminous plein air paintings, Helen Lundeberg's precisely imagined spaces, and Richard Diebenkorn's abstracted landscapes to Ed Ruscha's vernacular observations and Andrea Bowers's visual provocations, the collection reveals an evolving dialogue between place and imagination, personal expression and collective experience.

The collection also reflects broader transformations in modern and contemporary art. California has always served as a site of experimentation, where artists have challenged conventions, explored new materials and technologies, and engaged with changing ideas about nature, identity, and society. This history comes into focus in Hello Again, the first exhibition of the newly combined collection, which I organized with the assistance of graduate student researcher Julia Pelletier. Bringing familiar works into new conversations and contexts, the exhibition explores how artists have transformed their physical environments into expressions of spiritual life, inner experience, and social realities. From Agnes Pelton's and Carolina Caycedo's allegorical approaches to landscape to Ed Bereal's and Gordon Wagner's compositions of salvaged objects, Hello Again offers a complex portrait of the place we call home.

As a university art museum, we actively connect the artistic stories our collection tells with the research, teaching, and interdisciplinary inquiry taking place at UC Irvine. Faculty from art history, East Asian studies, English, studio art, and beyond have led talks, exhibited, and contributed works to the collection. Classes ranging from modern African American art to French literature visit the galleries as part of their coursework. Graduate student researchers conduct original art historical research and curate exhibitions, while a summer immersion program gives undergraduates hands-on museum experience and career preparation. This exchange works in both directions: University research becomes a public experience in the galleries, while the museum's collections and expertise enrich teaching and scholarship across campus.

Our location makes those connections especially tangible. The museum extends UC Irvine into the heart of Orange County's arts district, on the Segerstrom Center for the Arts campus across the street from South Coast Plaza. I love the energy of this place and the welcoming design of our building. That openness is reflected in our audiences. Three-quarters of our visitors are under thirty-five years of age. Alongside UC Irvine students, who can reach us by shuttle from campus, we welcome more than four thousand Title I K–12 students each year through school visits that come with free transportation and hot lunches.

For me, these are important measures of the museum's public role. We can introduce people to art at different points in their lives, offer new ways to understand the region they call home, and create meaningful connections between the cultural life of Orange County and the intellectual and creative life of UC Irvine. Free admission is central to that mission. As an art museum, we have a responsibility to care for our artworks for future generations, and as a public university art museum, we have a further responsibility to ensure that everyone has the opportunity to experience art, encounter new ideas, and see themselves in the cultural life of our region.

I am deeply grateful to the many donors and partners whose generosity makes this work possible, including Christina Buck, on behalf of her parents, Bente and Gerald E. Buck; Trace and Laurén Chalmers; Jack and Shanaz Langson; The Muzzy Family; James B. and Rosalyn L. Pick; Anton and Jennifer Segerstrom; and James Irvine Swinden and family, among many others. Their support enables us to care for the collection, bring new perspectives into view, and keep art accessible to the public for generations to come.

I invite you to visit and discover the collection for yourself. You'll find stories that are familiar, others you may encounter for the first time, and many more waiting to be told.

A Century Shaped by California. A Future Shaped by You.

For more than a century, Laguna Art Museum has been shaped by a powerful idea: art connects people to place, one another and the California experience. Since 1918, LAM has presented exhibitions featuring California art and artists. For the past 14 years, LAM has also produced its annual Art + Nature series, which brings artists, thought leaders and the public together for experiences extending beyond the museum's galleries and into the surrounding landscape.

When artists including Anna Hills and Edgar Payne came together to form the Laguna Beach Art Association, their vision helped establish Laguna Beach as one of the nation's most distinctive arts communities, and their vision continues to guide LAM today. From its landmark location on Cliff Drive overlooking the Pacific, LAM builds upon more than a century of history while drawing new California artists, ideas and audiences into the museum's ever-evolving story.

ROOTED IN CALIFORNIA. LOOKING FORWARD.

LAM exists to enlighten and engage people of all ages through art that embodies and preserves the California experience. Its exhibitions span generations, connecting California's artistic legacy with some of today's most compelling voices.

Among the Museum's current highlights is de la Torre Brothers: The Tipping Point, an immersive installation by internationally recognized sibling artists Einar and Jamex de la Torre. Born in Guadalajara, Mexico, and raised in Dana Point, the brothers have collaborated since the 1990s. In The Tipping Point, these critically acclaimed artists have used mixed media and blown glass sculpture to create an undeniably unique immersive installation. Their work has been exhibited in England, France, Germany, Poland and the Netherlands, and across the United States. Now, their work is on exhibition through the end of January just eight miles from where they grew up.

Also on view is Kim Manfredi: View with a Grain of Sand, an exhibition of paintings exploring perception, landscape and humanity's relationship with the natural world, as well as Radiant Terrains: Elements of Light in Contemporary Art from the Permanent Collection, examining how California artists from the 1960s to today have transformed light into material, atmosphere and metaphor.

ART + NATURE: A LAGUNA BEACH TRADITION

This November, LAM presented the 14th annual Art + Nature, its signature multidisciplinary series celebrating the dynamic exchange between artistic expression and environmental awareness. Established in 2013, Art + Nature brings together art, science, the environment and the community through exhibitions, outdoor installations and participatory experiences.

This year, artist Kim Manfredi extended art beyond the museum walls with A Flag Walk for Our Future. Installed along a 0.7-mile coastal route through Heisler Park, clusters of hand-painted and hand-gilded flags evoked the changing colors and atmosphere of Dawn, Day, Dusk and Night. Tens of thousands of community members from Laguna Beach, Orange County and beyond participated throughout the course of the program. The experience reflected something essential about Laguna Beach itself: this is a place where art and nature have been inseparable for generations.

A COMMUNITY INVESTING IN THE FUTURE

LAM's story has always been one of community. That spirit has been on vivid display every spring at its California Cool Art Auction. Celebrating its 45th year in March 2027, the Art Auction brings together artists, collectors and philanthropists to generate significant support for LAM and its array of art education programs for children and families.

Community generosity reached another historic milestone in 2026 when the Quilter Family made a $3 million gift — the largest single donation in LAM's history - to establish the Anna Hills Curator Endowed Chair. This gift connects LAM's past directly to its future, honoring a pioneering founder while providing essential and enduring support for curatorial leadership, exhibitions, scholarship and engagement.

And that future carries special significance as the City of Laguna Beach prepares to celebrate its centennial in 2027. No other institution is more closely connected to Laguna Beach's artistic identity than LAM, one of California's oldest institutions dedicated to exhibiting fine art. Its roots predate the City's incorporation by nearly a decade, underscoring the extraordinary role art and artists have played in shaping the Laguna Beach we know today.

COME VISIT LAGUNA ART MUSEUM AGAIN, OR FOR THE FIRST TIME.

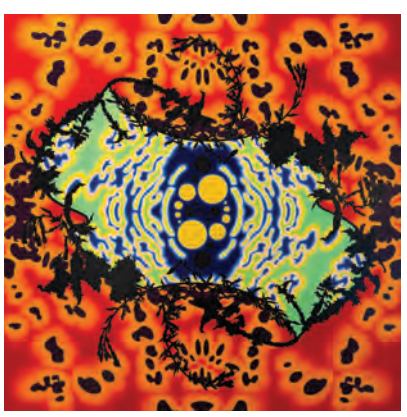

If you have never visited Laguna Art Museum, now is the time to discover it. And if you haven't been in a while, make your way back. You may find a museum that feels refreshed, yet unmistakably familiar.

The exhibitions are dynamic, the conversations are expanding and new generations of artists and audiences are finding their place here. LAGUNA ART MUSEUM is Your Museum. Join us.
